

Overcoming Panic in Volatile Markets

MARCH 2020

As we all know from news headlines, global stock markets have now entered a bear market, having declined more than 20% from recent highs. As of Thursday, March 12, U.S. stocks had declined over 26% from their high point on February 19. And markets have remained extremely volatile since then. In our last portfolio update, we referenced a famous quote from value investor Warren Buffett: “Be greedy when others are fearful.” Historically, this has been a very good investment mantra to have.

In Litman Gregory’s 30-plus years, we’ve been through several crises and stock market declines. From experience, we know the best time to stick to your investment discipline and buy is usually when you feel fearful but your analysis suggests the likelihood of a strongly favorable medium- to longer-term outcome is very good, as we believe is true today.

What Happens After Markets Fall 25%

© Copyright 2020. Litman Gregory Analytics, LLC. Source: Morningstar. Data: S&P 500 Index price returns; dividends are not included.

A 25% or greater drawdown in U.S. stocks is quite infrequent. It's happened only eight times in the past 70 years. But such painful periods do happen. Investors in equities need to be emotionally and financially prepared for them. And the longer-term returns are worth the short-term discomfort.

Since 1950, buying U.S. stocks after the initial 25% decline of a bear market—as we are doing in a prudent, incremental fashion in portfolios during this downturn—delivered strong returns over the next five or 10 years most of the time.

Given that the main catalyst for this downturn is the coronavirus (alongside an unexpected oil price war) and that there is an end game for the virus at some point, it seems reasonable that markets will rally when virus news turns incrementally positive (the spread slows, new cases stabilize or drop, treatments or vaccines are developed, etc.). But even if this bear market lasts longer than the historical average of 18 months, potential forward-looking U.S. stock returns have already improved. And they will get even better the lower stocks go. Because we entered this crisis underweight to U.S. stocks, we have the flexibility now to add back to and even overweight them if the selloff deepens. Even after our first incremental purchases, we are still underweight to U.S. stocks.

So while it may be hard to imagine now, there will be an end point to this crisis from a medical perspective and thus from an economic and financial markets perspective. Of that, we think we can be confident. The key to overcoming panic in financial markets is to focus on the future. Remember, severe losses only become permanent losses if you sell, go to cash, and lock them in. Volatility is uncomfortable when you're living through it, but it sows the seed of the future's strong returns.

With all this said, we recognize it is natural to be concerned when volatile markets impact your portfolio. For that reason, we encourage you to connect with your advisor to discuss any questions you may have. We appreciate the trust you place in Litman Gregory as your guide through the everchanging financial market environment.

Best regards,

The Litman Gregory Investment Team

Note: For discretionary use by investment professionals. This document is provided by Litman Gregory Asset Management, LLC ("Litman Gregory") for informational purposes only and no statement is to be construed as a solicitation or offer to buy or sell a security, or the rendering of personalized investment advice. There is no agreement or understanding that Litman Gregory will provide individual advice to any investor or advisory client in receipt of this document. Certain information constitutes "forward-looking statements" and due to various risks and uncertainties actual events or results may differ from those projected. Some information contained in this report may be derived from sources that we believe to be reliable; however, we do not guarantee the accuracy or timeliness of such information. Past performance may not be indicative of future results and there can be no assurance the views and opinions expressed herein will come to pass. Investing involves risk, including the potential loss of principal. Any reference to a market index is included for illustrative purposes only, as an index is not a security in which an investment can be made. Indexes are unmanaged vehicles that do not account for the deduction of fees and expenses generally associated with investable products. Returns shown for individual securities holdings are calculated on a gross and unrealized basis and do not account for the deduction of LGAM's management fees, which would adversely impact net results. A list of all recommendations made by LGAM within the immediately preceding one year is available upon request at no charge. For additional information about Litman Gregory, please consult the Firm's Form ADV disclosure documents, the most recent versions of which are available on the SEC's Investment Adviser Public Disclosure website (adviserinfo.sec.gov) and may otherwise be made available upon written request.

